In June 2024, researchers at Cornell University, New York, developed a method called "two-for-one" fission, or singlet fission. This method uses ultrafast laser spectroscopy to allow an organic molecule to absorb light and split its energy into two - effectively doubling its ability to harvest light.

The collaboration focuses on various renewable energy technologies, such as wind energy, green hydrogen, solar energy, and energy storage. The agreement includes agreements on the exchange of personnel and scientific and technological knowledge and the organization of, for example, joint working groups and research projects.
